Roosevelt won on his war record in New York. It was the rough riders who did it.

America is recognized as being the greatest warship country in the world. And this applies to building the ships, manning them, sinking them, or raising them—everything, in fact, except in the matter of losing one to an enemy.

"Why is a merchant who does not advertise like a man in a rowboat?" asked the student.

"Keeps going backward," guessed his friend.

"No; he's trying to get along without sales," said the student.—Spokane (Wash.) Spokesman Review.

"The Strange Adventures of Miss Brown," an English comedy, which ran for two consecutive seasons in London, and over one hundred nights in New York City, will be seen at the Grand, next Friday night.

Woman's Claim to Trousers.

Reverend Anna Shaw, Miss Susan B. Anthony, and other leading delegates to the Women's National Council at Omaha, seems to have a resentful sort of conviction to the effect that man has played a low-down trick on woman in the matter of trousers.

It is claimed by these good and thoughtful women, who have doubtless made a historical investigation of the matter, that it was a woman who invented trousers. They assert that this was done in the days of old when man was so busy fighting that he had no time to think about his legs at all, save as they might serve him in getting to, or away from his enemies. Woman, left at home during this scrapping, evolved pants from her inner consciousness. But when the tyrant man returned from wars hexaw and approved of these new fads of fashion, and straightway took them from woman and donned them himself. So comfortable were they that he has worn them ever since, leaving woman, the inventor, trouserless "P'th' could blast" of many a weary winter. It was a clear case of might makes right which, of course, is all wrong.

If woman can make good her claim of priority in the creation and use of pants, they are hers.

They are not becoming to her—they give her a funny waddle and a bologna aspect, but that none of man's business. If she really wants to wear 'em, she is entitled, as their originator to do so. All that is left to man is to invent some substitute for himself, and then to view with resignation the spectacle of a world of women parading in pants.—St. Louis Republic.

Following is the boss cotton picking story from an exchange: Mrs. ———, who was 117 years old the 8th of last January, besides doing the cooking and washing for a big family and walking two miles to the cotton fields, has picked an average of 1186 pounds of cotton peaday and has not missed a day since the 1st of September. It is also a fact that, besides being in the last stages of consumption, Mrs. ——— is totally blind and has no hands or feet.

It's the skill of putting together the proper ingredients that makes your prescription right—better go to Emmel's—a right reasonable price there too. 1854f

Three sombre figures toiled the narrow way,
An angel, a woman, a man,
The angel, with smile beatific, cried:
"Win Heaven first who can!"
For the holiest deed would surely win
First entrance to Heaven's day.
The angel was second at the gate of pearl,
For the woman had led the way.
—E. A. Stanton.

"The Strange Adventures of Miss Brown" will be seen next Friday night at the Grand opera house. Realizing that a gem, no matter what its value, is not much sought after unless tastily set; Cohen and Grahame Managers, who believe they have found a jewel in "The Strange Adventures of Miss Brown," were determined to set it as artistically as ever a play has been staged, and every lady and gent engaged to portray each part are picked from the best people in the profession, therefore our citizens can rest assured that next Friday night will be the night set aside for a good laughing evening.
